THE DISCUSSION PROPO-SITION.

Since my letter to you some two weeks ago, in which I suggested the advisability of arranging for discussions between the Mormon elders and the ministers or laymen of the various churches in this city, there has been considerable interest awakened therein.

The necessity for such intellec-tual contact seems apparent, be-cause the rival churches dovote so much of their time in endeavoring to show that it is the duty of all Christians to crush out the Mormon

Christians to crush out the Mormon church. It seems to me that if they feel so certain of their ability to crush it out, they need have no fears about meeting its advocates.

If, however, their assumptions of superiority are but assumptions; if the doctrines they teach as Bible doctrines ere not so firmly based upon the Divine book as those of the unpopular Mormons, it is well they should know it, so that the sectarians may cease making so many idiculous exhibitions of their effeminacy.

sectarians may cease making so many ridiculous exhibitions of their effeminacy.

The manager of the Walker Opera House has offered the use of that elegant establishment for the discussion of Christian doctrines, and the Latter-day Saints are not excluded from the proposition.

Now, let some of the champions of the progressive religions, who claim to base their faith upon the Bible, but who so offensively flaunt their charges of ignorance, in the face of the Bible-believing Mormons, come to the front with the Bible in their hands, and, with that as a guide, let them at once and forever rid the world of Mormonism and all its objectionable features. If it cannot stand upon the Bible, it cannot stand at all. If Mormonism does not agree with the Bible let us know

How He Won Her.

' Ceolle!"

"Yes, paps."
She arose—a brown-syed, brown-haired girl, with a tare grace and sweetness in her manner—and approached. Pierceval Deadwood pushed aside the mass of papers that pushed aside the mass of papers that lay on the desk before him and gazed steadily, almost fiercely, at his daughter. She returned the gaze with a timid, hesitating, May-corn look, while the rosy blabes of maiden modesty chased each other rapidly across her fair young features and leaped outward into the great beyond.

"What brings young Frelinghuy-sen here so often?" asked the old

"His fact I suppose," was toe an swer, in low shruking tones. "I noticed that he had them with him the last time he called"—and the girl shrank instinctively against her bustle.

"I want no nonsense," replied the father, "I have called you here to talk about your future. You must make a wealthy marriage," "Papa!"

"Papa!"
"Do not interrupt me," he continued. "I have spoken my piece, and have only to add that I am a Hard Man from Way-back."
Sobbing as if her heart would break, Cecile went slowly to the sofa and eat down with a dull, sickening thud.

She had broken her bustle.
Suddenly she arose. "I love Harold Frelinghuysen," she said, "and I will marry no other man."
Two minntes later she was doing up her back hair.

"You are sire you love me?"
"Can you doubt me?" asked Har-

"Yes," replied the girl, "I can, but I have decided not to"-and kissing him warmly, she went away.

Spring in Coshocton. Pierceval Deadwood is again seated at his deck.

"You expect youn, Frelingbuysen to-day?" he says to Cecile. "Yes, papa."

Even while they are speaking the door opens and Harold enters.

"Have you come to redeem your promise?" asks the old man, scorn fully.

"I have," is the reply, and Harold places $50,000 in bonds on the desk

"How did you get all this money, and where have you been all winter?" Drawing himself up proudly, Har-old answered, "I am a retired Wash-ington detective."—Chicago Tribune,
